

The Second Coming of Mile Twenty Five: Catchy Second Single “Life to Live”

By: Peter Welsh

November 17, 2019

Central NL, based 4 piece Alternative Rock band is releasing their second single “Life to Live” on January 20th, 2020. Band members Peter Welsh, Carter Fancey, Marcel Reid and Matthew Pittman will be holding a press release

Their single “Life to Live” is a hybrid of modern pop rock with old school Tom Petty swagger and an underlying country pop melody. The band expects listeners to see a new side of Mile Twenty Five apart from their debut emotional song about their hometown. This single, “Life to Live” is an upbeat, bass grooving song about taking your life in your own hands. It showcases the bands morals and humor.

More information and promotional content will be released at 8:00 PM at The Oasis Lounge December 12th, 2019.

About Mile Twenty Five

Formed in March of 2019, Mile Twenty Five consider their sound “Backyard Rock” an idea expressed by frontman Peter Welsh, and drummer Carter Fancey that describe their mix of roots and pop rock music. With a strong melodic force from Peter and guitarist Marcel Reid and a blastful thundering rhythm section from Carter and bassist Matthew Pittman, the band delivers optimistic and youthful anthems about living and loving. “There’s a lot of hard work but it pays off. The brotherhood we have bonded here is to die for. Carter grew up in hockey. I’m sure he can relate to a similar brotherhood but nothing as strong as this,” said Reid. After their short success with their debut single “Riverside Drive” they’ve teamed up with Sevenview Studios once again to take audiences on another journey.
